

Community and Regional Planning

Included below are lists of places where you might look for an internship or a permanent position after graduation, followed by a list of career paths that reflect specific positions pursued by recent graduates.

Please note that some careers require additional education beyond the bachelor's degree.

Private Practice

Land property developers
Consulting, real estate, architecture, engineering and multidisciplinary firms
Real estate agencies
Urban, regional and city planning firms

Public Practice

Environmental agencies
Economic development agencies
Extension positions
Federal, state, regional, county and municipal government agencies
Health departments
Housing authorities
Public transit authorities

Nonprofit Organizations

Chambers of commerce
Environmental advocacy organizations
Historic preservation organizations
International development agencies
Neighborhood and community advocacy groups
Peace Corps
Social service organizations

Career Paths

Comprehensive planning
Downtown development
Economic development
Environmental planning
Geographic information systems (GIS) specialty
Growth management
Housing
Historic preservation
International planning
Land-use planning
Neighborhood planning
Neotraditional planning
Planning management
Policy planning and management
Regional and metropolitan planning
Rural planning
Site design
Small-town planning
Social planning
Strategic planning
Sustainable development planning
Transportation planning
Urban design
Urban revitalization
Zoning administration

Career paths for which additional education/training is required

University or college teaching, research and administration